Monthly comment

Global equity market corrected in December, following the post-election rally observed in the previous month. The US reported slightly higher than expected November inflation numbers at 2.7%, which prompted the Fed to adopt a more hawkish tone at its latest meeting. Although interest rates were cut by an additional 25 basis points, the Fed signaled that fewer cuts are likely in 2025 due to persistent inflation. Despite little news on our portfolio companies, the Partners Group Listed Investments SICAV - Listed Infrastructure Fund decreased, primarily driven by rising yields. Most sub-sectors performed negatively, with towers and regulated utilities being among the worst performers. Transport infrastructure delivered good performance, while midstream pipelines also held up well during the month.

The less-than-truckload (LTL) logistics segment declined in December after a robust rebound following the U.S. presidential election in November. This sector faced disappointing results from FedEx's LTL business, while Old Dominion Freight Line reported an 8% year-over-year decline in revenue per day for November, which lowered expectations for the fourth quarter across the sector.

Ferrovial was among the better performers in the portfolio, as the Spanish toll road operator closed the sale of its remaining stake in Heathrow Airport and doubled its stock buyback program to €600 million. Both developments were positively received by investors.

Eliia, the Belgian grid operator, faced challenges this month amid rising yields. The company is pursuing one of the most ambitious growth pipelines among European utilities, which will necessitate significant capital expenditures. Ongoing concerns regarding the funding of this investment plan have led to investor caution in light of interest rate projections. However, the company announced the appointment of a new CEO and CFO after a lengthy search, with both candidates promoted from within. This transition is expected to alleviate some uncertainty and provide continuity for the strategic plan.
